

Melting pot

This bold kitchen with striking angles and look-at-me colours incorporates subtle techniques to merge seamlessly with the contemporary home it resides in.

THE BRIEF

Artform Industries and Kleenmaid Osborne Park's senior design consultant Roger Davis were enlisted to produce a functional kitchen that exuded contemporary style. Using bold colours and interesting shapes and forms, the kitchen was to look extraordinary and reflect the modern styling of the clients' new home.

THE SOLUTION

An island with angular lines creates a fascinating feature in the centre of the kitchen with bold reds and aluminium.

The island houses the dishwasher, drawers and a polystone benchtop that features a built-in draining board and surrounds the sink, which appears to slip straight into the floor.

HERA LIGHTS are used throughout the kitchen to provide extra light for benchtops and a softening effect on the space.

The pantry was created to double as a mini scullery for food preparation. It features an internal benchtop where small appliances can be stored and used. For larger appliances and utensils, soft-closing inner drawers and 300mm-deep open shelves make ideal storage locations.

Next to the fridge, some striking feature shelves add another dimension to the kitchen. Recessed panels finished with two pack automotive lacquer have been hand polished to create an eye-catching effect.

The transition between the kitchen and living areas is softened due to the panels, particularly when the Hera lights are utilised.

Hera lights are again used in the pelmet of the kitchen, between the overheads and the benchtop, illuminating the worktops and creating a great visual display with the doors and cabinets simultaneously.

The back wall of the kitchen mirrors the island in colour and form. Stainless steel door handles offer an interesting contrast against the cherry red, while mimicking the flowing curves in the island.

The clean lines of the kitchen are further highlighted by the simple lines of the Kleenmaid appliances that appear to melt into the kitchen.

Depth is added to the kitchen via the extensive use of aluminium and frosted glass, which create a reflective surface.

THE USE OF ALUMINIUM AND FROSTED GLASS not only add depth to the kitchen via their reflective surface, they also complement the rest of the home's style.
